

Carbery partners with EIT Food to advance sustainable nutrition innovation

22 April 2025 | News

This partnership nurtures groundbreaking ideas, ensuring a more inclusive and sustainable approach to food production and consumption

This partnership nurtures groundbreaking ideas, ensuring a more inclusive and sustainable approach to food production and consumption

Carbery Group are delighted to announce we have joined EIT Food, the world's largest food innovation network co-funded by the EU. The partnership bolsters the commitment to innovation and sustainable food systems, aligned with core business priorities.

By joining EIT Food, Carbery will play a key role in driving open innovation to transform the food system. This partnership nurtures groundbreaking ideas, ensuring a more inclusive and sustainable approach to food production and consumption.

EIT Food unites industry leaders, startups, universities, and research institutions across the European Union. The network focuses on transformative solutions in protein diversification, circular food systems, digital traceability, sustainable agriculture, and targeted nutrition.

As a strategic partner, Carbery gains access to EIT Food's extensive network, creating opportunities to evolve our innovation pipeline and collaborate with startups, academia and industry peers through working groups and accelerators.

Carbery Group CEO Jason Hawkins commented: "Our alliance with EIT Food marks an exciting step for Carbery. It reflects our dedication to sustainable nutrition and innovation at a time when the food and nutrition sector faces pressing challenges such as food security. Collaborating with leading minds and organisations across the EU is a unique opportunity to develop practical industry solutions. We look forward to contributing to EIT Food's initiatives in 2025 and beyond."