

Silesia opens new plant in Singapore

23 April 2018 | News

Singapore – German flavor manufacturer Silesia is reacting to the growing demand for the food and beverage industry in Asia by establishing a new plant for the manufacturing of liquid and powder flavors in Singapore.

With its location in Singapore and subsidiaries in Vietnam, Thailand, Indonesia, Malaysia and in the Philippines the company already has an extensive market coverage in South East Asia.

Singapore – German flavor manufacturer Silesia is reacting to the growing demand for the food and beverage industry in Asia by establishing a new plant for the manufacturing of liquid and powder flavors in Singapore.

With its location in Singapore and subsidiaries in Vietnam, Thailand, Indonesia, Malaysia and in the Philippines the company already has an extensive market coverage in South East Asia.

Jorgen Hejl, Managing Director Silesia Flavours South East Asia Pte Ltd and Thomas Trunk, Executive Vice President Silesia International GmbH discussed the companies' opportunities moving forward.

The market and the potential of the countries around Singapore are significant, according to Hejl. "Not only does the location provide an advantage because of its easy access to air and sea transportation to destinations within and beyond South East Asia. Availability of qualified personnel as well as political stability and clear rules and regulations also plead for the mega-city," he explains.